In the area I live, I can get virtually NO local channels on my radio. At night I will occasionally get some pretty rough AM channels, but during the day it is almost non-existent. I commute several hours a day, and it makes for some pretty quiet driving. That's why I subscribed to XM radio. It has basically changed my life. If you give people the opportunity to start limiting what I can hear, it defeats the whole purpose of my subscription. People who get regular radio reception aren't subjected to this type of censorship, and we shouldn't be either. I will contact my congressmen about this legislation, but I think that the FCC should be there for ALL of us, and the solution should lie with you!
